PolicyLab is excited to share our new portfolio videos that give you quick snapshots of the important topics and goals we're trying to achieve in adolescent health and well-being; health care coverage, access and quality; health equity and intergenerational family services. The videos below explain the missions of each of our portfolios and give you a glimpse of a few key issues PolicyLab is tackling collectively.

Teens in America today have a number of unique health care needs that often go unmet. Our Adolescent Health and Well-being portfolio is turning high-quality research into actionable policy solutions that meet those needs.

Our Health Care Coverage, Access & Quality research portfolio is working to ensure that families can afford the health care their children need, and that all children receive the right care, in the right place, at the right time.

Our Health Equity research portfolio seeks to better understand the many factors that contribute to disparate health outcomes for children, including addressing social determinants of health outside the health system, improving provider-patient relationships and enhancing access to services.

Evidence shows that when parents do better, their kids do better. Our Intergenerational Family Services research portfolio is developing, implementing and sustaining programs to provide more caregiver-focused services in pediatric settings.
